Psychotherapy for Widows

Women who have been widowed within the past year are invited to participate in a research project at the Center for the Study of Neuroses, a project of UCSF's Langley Porter Psychiatric Institute (LPPI). The center is known for its work in helping people accept and adapt to stressful events. The goal of the research project is to provide better mental health services to bereaved persons.

Women who want help to work through their loss will receive short-term psychotherapy at a nominal charge. Participants must not have received other psychotherapy since the death of their husbands. Women interested in the project should call 681-8080, ext. 510.

Help for Adolescents

The Interdisciplinary Adolescent Medicine Program of the Department of Pediatrics has assisted hundreds of teenagers and parents in understanding and adjusting to the changes that occur in the awkward period known as adolescence.

The program, which is conducted by a group of UCSF physicians, social workers and nurse practitioners, helps teenagers with such health problems as birth control, nutrition and weight control, acne, substance use and abuse, depression and difficulties with home and school.

For further information call 666-2184.

New Parkinson's Disease Center

A new UCSF Parkinson's Disease Center, designed to serve as an information and referral clinic for patients, their families and the community, was formally dedicated in December.

Objectives of the center are to provide consultation and diagnostic facilities for patients suffering from or suspected of having Parkinsonism. The center staff will coordinate related health services for the patient, including physical therapy, speech therapy, occupational therapy and visiting nurse services; help people with Parkinsonism meet others with the disease; refer patients to neurologists in their local areas; and conduct additional research into the causes and treatment of the disease.

The center is located on the eighth floor of the Ambulatory Care Building, 400 Parnassus Avenue. Persons who would like more information about Parkinsonism and its management or center services should call 666-4862.

Blood Donation Day Feb 25

Persons wishing to donate blood may participate in the UCSF blood donation drive, Monday, February 25. It is one of three sponsored annually by the Irwin Memorial Blood Bank of the S.F. Medical Society.

Blood may be donated at two locations: the mezzanine level of the School of Nursing Building (go through Medical Sciences Building and across the courtyard) 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.; or the main lounge of Millberry Union, 500 Parnassus Ave., 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

'The Best' Listed / Top Honors Awarded

Eighty-five UCSF full-time and clinical medical faculty and alumni were listed as "the best" in their specialties and subspecialities in the new book The Best Doctors in the U.S. by John Pekkanen (Seaview Books, N.Y., 1979). The book is based on information from interviews with and questionnaires given to hundreds of physicians throughout the country.

The UCSF Hospitals and Clinics is named among the 16 "best" in the country, and its Pain Center is listed as one of 20 in the country. There are 26 UCSF surgeons listed in a dozen different specialties; and another 21 UCSF physicians are listed in various specialties and subspecialties of pediatrics and neonatology. In addition, 11 percent of all gastroenterologists, 9 percent of all ophthalmologists, and 8 percent of all radiologists and dermatologists listed in the book are UCSF faculty.

Other specialties in which UCSF physicians are listed as excelling are cardiology, pulmonary disease, endocrinology, rheumatology, neurology, reproductive endocrinology, radiation oncology and child psychiatry.

In addition, four top national honors in health care went to UCSF physicians. Pediatrician Abraham M. Rudolph received the Borden Gold Medal Award for investigations in the field of circulatory development; and pediatrician Philip L. Ballard the E. Mead Johnson Award for research in preventing respiratory distress syndrome in premature infants.

Howard Hughes Investigator Y.W. Kan received the Damashek Award for hematology research, and neurologist J. Richard Baringer received the J. Elliott Royer Award for the "most significant" contribution to psychiatry and neurology during the previous year.

Occupational Health Program

A UCSF program is the hub for the patient treatment and evaluation segment of a new million-dollar UC Northern California Occupational Health Center, established with state support and utilizing programs at UC-Berkeley, UC-Davis and UCSF. A similar UC program is planned for Southern California.

The new center has been established in order to expand research on occupational hazards, such as dangerous chemicals and work-related stress; expand treatment and diagnosis of work-related ailments; and more than double the number of specialists trained in occupational health fields.

At San Francisco General Hospital, UCSF staff is available to treat occupational injuries and to evaluate the effects and threats of work-related stress, noise levels and chemical agents, such as asbestos. Two Occupational Health Clinics offer daytime or evening appointments to anyone needing their services. The clinics will draw on the resources of the new regional Occupational Health Center and will themselves provide a clinical base for teaching activities.

Millberry Union Class Registration Jan 7 & 8

Open to UCSF students and Millberry Union members on Mon., Jan. 7. Open to all on Tues., Jan. 8. Register at the Athletic Control Desk, Millberry Union. 8 a.m.-8:30 p.m.

Childbirth Education Films

The first color films dealing with childbirth education in a cultural context to be made available nationwide have been produced by the UCSF Bilingual Media Project at San Francisco General Hospital. The project is funded by a grant from the California State Department of Health, Maternal and Child Health Branch.

Available on both 16-millimeter color film and videotape cassettes, the three 10-minute programs are designed as aids to group discussion on pregnancy, birth and postnatal care in clinics serving black and Spanish-speaking expectant parents. They can also be used as educational tools for health professionals. Featured in each film are actual hospital and clinic staff members, patients and their families.

For further information contact Video Graph, 2833 - 25th St., S.F., CA 94110, telephone (415) 282-6001.

Free Arthritis Education Classes

A new series of free education classes for persons with the most common form of arthritis, osteoarthritis, will begin Monday, Jan. 21, at the UCSF Rosalind Russell Medical Research Center for Arthritis.

The classes help people understand their disease, sometimes called degenerative joint disease, and live their lives more fully. Patients attend two classes on consecutive Mondays, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., on the fifth floor of the Ambulatory Care Building, 400 Parnassus Avenue. Family members are invited to attend.

The series on osteoarthritis, as well as a similar program on rheumatoid arthritis, will continue for at least six months. For further information call 666-1192.

Housing Listings Needed

The housing crunch is making it difficult for students and visiting scholars at UCSF to find a place to live. Those affected most seriously are visiting scholars pursuing clerkships for periods of one to three months. The Housing Office has a free rental agency for all types of accommodations, including houses, apartments, flats, rooms and various kinds of share facilities. Vacant furnished rooms are badly needed. Persons interested in listing available housing should call 666-1426.
